HISTORY

According to the early settlers a long time ago there were trees that grew abundantly in the area. It has a heart-shaped leaves about am man's size palm that bore pink flowers. Visiting people from neighboring areas often called these trees "Banag" which was believed to be the origin of the name Banago.

In 1850, barangay Banago was officially named Barrio Banago by the Gobernadorcillo, which resulted to a dominant Spanish influence over the people. For generations the head of the Barangay is called "Deligado" who is being appointed by the Mayor of the City of Bacolod which lasted until the Commonwealth era. During the liberation, the head of the Barangay was called Teniente del Barrio (Barrio Lieutenant) which later on was revised to Kapitan del Barrio or Barrio Captain by Republic Act No. 3950 in 1963. During the Marcos Regime, it was changed to Punong Barangay and is still being adopted today.

During the Spanish era, education takes the form of home school in the form of tutorship which later on was replaced through the establishment of primary schools.

Modes of transport is through the use of wooden boat or raft made of bamboo. However, most of the inhabitants just walk along the shoreline in going to nearby communities to conduct their trade and commerce.

Most of the barangay residents were fishermen with fishing as their main source of livelihood even until day.
